

STORYBOARDS

In the first storyboard, I was not able to show as much as I had hoped but I think I was still able to get my idea across. The other person I talked to said that they were able to grasp my overall concept. They could see that the audience were students as they are seen in the library with laptops in the first photo. It is also clear what their intent in using my website would be based on the conversation they are having. They are trying to look for housing for the upcoming year, so they go to the housing website.

In this storyboard, the other person also knew what my project was about based on my drawings and the conversation between my stick figures. They could see that my audience are UC Davis students as they are seen inside the dorms and the lounge. The intent is also clear in my drawings as to why people would need to use my website. In addition, the other person was able to get an idea of how my website would function.